The Full Movie Trailer of Hasee Toh Phasee Hindi is not Available But Will ProvideOur nation and our Congress were just reminded once more of the differences between rich and poor, and what constitutes justice. The Supreme Court's decision in the case of Shelby County, Ala. v. Holder offers a reminder of what an underclass American looks like: Black. Americans who were born after 1980 aren't likely to remember a time when we didn't have all sorts of court cases, mostly in the nation's inner cities, filed to challenge the dispossession, marginalization and death caused by the War on Drugs and the accompanying war on Black bodies. (The additional dispossession, marginalization and death of immigrants and prison- and foster care-bound children of color has been lost over time.) The results of these decisions, especially in the Inner City Era of the 1980s, were warrens of rotting housing projects and shepherding yards, and high rates of murder, rape and incarceration in the ghettos. Despite the hideous results of the War on Drugs and a system of racial profiling, judicial overreach and over incarceration, and the re-migration of poor Black and Brown people into lands with no social services, Obama and the Left have been busy demeaning poor Black and Brown people as suffering and broken. This is done without the slightest attempt to consider how poor Black and Brown people might see their conditions and needs. This is the true story of Shelby County, which to my knowledge hasn't been told often enough. One reason is that Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg -- the first Jewish justice and the Court's oldest justice -- is as g
