The game before the title of ACR is first introduced by Koei and was released in 1991 as the first game in their Dynasty series titled ROCR. In comparison to Dynasty Warriors, it featured the first of its kind action RPG gameplay. It has a ton of music ranging from rock, some very fanfare-esque love songs, and even a song that rivals a Ghibli movie. I don't normally like to recommend modern music or bands for video games, but like I said it doesn't really matter because of how catchy this song is that often I'd be singing it just for the song itself even if I never played the game. ACR also has an epic story to it, a story that might not fit with the game's title or theme but the story itself is very well done. It has plenty of situations that could fit into a story for any age, it's not necessarily a child friendly game, but the plot is intriguing and engaging nonetheless. If you ever played Okage you'll know how to do the controls; you play as a carpenter, a warrior, an archer, a mage, a thief, a merchant, and a merchant with a sword. Each class has their own unique weapons, such as the double weapons, to the bard that can use charm to turn the enemy into a bunny. Each character also has their own skill trees, where you can either create a melee skill or magic skill. So you can become a master at using large blades and whacking to death your opponents or you can become a great mage that casts spells to aid you and your allies. It's the same thing for every character except for the Thief who is a stealthy guy that can steal items and secrets without anyone noticing. Although the story is well-written I often found that it was difficult to advance the game if I wanted to because you have to grind and have everything the game gives you. If you want to advance more in the story you have to grind the game. There are several sections where enemies block your progression but there is no getting around it. Often you will run into a high difficulty boss that will kill you almost immediately if you do not have all the best gear in the game. When you defeat the boss, your reward is usually just the bare minimum gear and skills you need to continue the story so you can have more fun. ACR was the last game in bff6bb2d33

I'm attempting to display the image continuously from the server side. It is not dynamic. The image only shows briefly then disappears until the next refresh. You never said what kind of programming language you are using and what code you have to implement your logic so I am not able to give you a complete answer. What I can say is that you are doing in JS a client side task so you should handle that request on the client side. For example in C#: public void Page_Load(object sender, EventArgs e) { if (Session["image_already_shown"]!= null) { // the image has been displayed before, so there is no need to // do the request on the server, just render it return;
