We make a sudden about of one of the ways people buy and sell games through the web. It's the most convenient way to shop games on the web. but the problem is few people actually make a profit form them selves. When you ask for support to get paid, none respond. When I was becoming more active. I would approach the developers to see if it was possible to make a transaction regarding how I could help pay for the community. the response was negative. It's not a bug, we just don't care about the community. it's just the fact that the different online shops for games don't work together. Even if they solve this problem. I still wouldn't know how to approach the developers and hopefully get paid. It is always the workers fault that they make software to not support them. They are just lazy group of developers. Expect more artist to create all games to be purchased and played by the people who actually pay for them.

Donations Patreon: Paypal: After a couple of months of hard work and a heavy emphasis on users, our game has received a last update. The usual bugs and crash fixes are included, as well as a couple of nice features like a new save and load feature. Patreon: Paypal: You know, this game has been around for a few years and no one has ever complained about bugs and crashes. It seems really disappointing to see you post about them so much. Please bear in mind that we're a group of hobbyists, students, designers and volunteers from around the world, and we have limited resources. As such, we can't always afford full-time developers. The only way we keep this game running is to receive enough donations. Thanks in advance for your support. You can find the next update here: c9d1549cdd
