Metastases in the nervous system are one of the possible long-term sequelae of the pediatric cancer. Intramedullary spinal cord metastases (IMSCM) are rare. Patients with IMSCM have a poor prognosis, because they are not amenable to conventional therapy, as surgical removal of the tumor is impossible. We describe a case of 19-year-old female patient with a history of neuroblastoma who was treated with chemotherapy for stage IV neuroblastoma. The patient died after 4 years of progressive neurological deterioration, with intracranial complications, as signs of a brainstem recurrence. Autopsy showed dissemination of neuroblastoma cells throughout the brain and spinal cord in addition to widespread metastatic disease. Diagnostic and therapeutic concepts of IMSCM are discussed.Q: Airline Pilot time during which they do have to begin flying Airline pilots are usually trained in a matter of months, but how do they actually get into air since this would be the most critical time and could potentially lead to fatalities. How do pilots actually begin working? and are there any safeguards that are in place to make sure that the pilot is ready to fly without actually starting as part of the training? A: In the United States, a pilot that has graduated from an FAA approved flight school and received his/her license can begin to fly, usually, directly from the FAA "Authorized Pilot Examiner" (APE). An APE is basically a practitioner of the sport of aviation who has gone through considerable training to become a licensed pilot examiner. In this capacity, the APE trains the new pilots he is examining on a daily basis. An APE is not a commercial airline pilot examiner, although some APEs are. The CFII (Commercial Flight Instructor) is the next level of training above the APE. A CFII will train the new pilot on a broader scope of aircraft types than the APE will. As a CFII, I would usually have the opportunity to train a newly licensed pilot one to three times before the pilot was allowed to pass a knowledge test. In this capacity, the CFII also helps the new pilot apply
