Just to get the point across, there is no relation between any two columns (i, j, k, l). It's just a bad example to show how one can prove a sequence is monotonic. Proof:

\begin{equation} \begin{split} \lim_{k \rightarrow \infty} \Big( \frac{\sum_{i=1}^k}{\sqrt{i}} \Big) &= \\ \lim_{k \rightarrow \infty} \Big( \frac{\sum_{i=1}^k}{\sqrt{i}} \Big) &= \\ \lim_{k \rightarrow \infty} \Big( \frac{\sum_{i=1}^k}{\sqrt{i}} \Big) &= \\ \lim_{k \rightarrow \infty} \Big( \frac{\sum_{i=1}^k}{\sqrt{i}} \Big) &= \end{split}

By doing so we can publish a complete story about any topic in any available format (HTML, DokuWiki, ...) Is there any way of stopping this? What are the ways of stopping it? A: If you are a big enough site to get blocked by this (you are), you could always use a version of your site that's hosted on something other than a blockable service. That way if you get blocked, you can just put up a hosted version of your site that can't be blocked. This isn't an ideal solution, but it's certainly more practical than abandoning the site. Q: c# variable as property(e.g. string a = "fred; name =" + someString)? I'm looking for a way to create a variable as a C# property. I know I can make something like: class A { public string Text {get; set;} } But I would like to make something like this, class A {

public string Text(string someString) {
    return someString + "; name = " + SomeOtherString; } } So that I could do something like: a = A(); a.Text("Fred ");
a.Text("Smith"); a.Text(); // returns
"Fred; name = "Fred Smith" What is the best way to do this? Thanks in advance!

A: You don't need a variable to have a property: public string Text(string someString) { return someString + "
name = " + SomeOtherString; }
a.Text("fred", "smith"); a.Text(); //
returns "Fred; name = "Fred Smith" // //
